MORE than 250 students and staff from schools across the Mid West attended a student leadership conference at the QEII centre last week.

The event was presented by Impact Leadership, an independent not-for-profit organisation, with a focus on developing leadership skills among youth.

Held over two days, for primary and secondary students, the conference drew a positive response from all involved.

Rangeway Primary School deputy principal Dean Vose said the conference aligned with the school's focus on student leadership.

"This year we have put a focus on developing student leadership and this event provides the perfect opportunity to develop the skills of the leadership group," he said.

"The conference helps students to be set up as role models and to integrate them within the school community."

Impact Leadership's Jenn Nicholls said the conference provided a unique opportunity for students and staff from different schools to meet, interact and exchange ideas. "We encourage students to meet other students from different schools, to share stories and even consider ideas to take back, change and make work for their own school," she said.

"The Impact student leadership conference provides information to equip students to be the best leaders they can, in the present and with tools they can use right now."

The primary school conference was attended by 10 schools: Bluff Point Primary School, Cervantes Primary School, Chapman Valley Primary School, Dongara Primary School, Geraldton

Grammar School, Mt Taroocla Primary School, Rangeway Primary School, St John's School Rangeway, Strathalbyn Christian College and Yuna Primary School. The secondary school conference was attended by eight schools: Carnamah District High School, Geraldton Grammar School, Geraldton Senior College, John Willcock College, Morawa District High School, Nagle Catholic College, Strathalbyn Christian College and WA College of Agriculture Morawa.
